Graphic Books were published by Samuel Tankel (1911-2002) and Zane Bouregy (1911-1975). Bouregy was born in Turkey. They were both photo-engravers and wrote a definitive book on two-color lithography; this publishing venture would seem to have been a sideline to that business. In the June 1954 and 1955 issues of The Writer, market reports give B. Williams as the editor. The June 1953 issue lists Zane Bouregy as editor.

Although the early volumes gave the publisher's full address on the title or copyright page, after a certain point the street address only appeared in mail-order ads in the back of the books, not all of which had such ads. Thus, my parenthetical listing of the street addresses in the publisher's notes above.

Books are generally dated by year only, although some later printings may specify a month for earlier printings. The publication dates given in the copyright registrations provide the only clues to frequency of publication. As a general rule, from 1949 to 1953, the books were issued at an average rate of one a month, with occasional gaps. From 1954 to 1957, the 25¢ series were issued at an average of 2 books a month, with the 35¢ books as irregular additions. As one would expect from such a meager publishing schedule, the books appear to have been issued sequentially, although some of the reissues may have been issued more randomly.

The 25¢ series concentrated on genre fiction, primarily mysteries, with an increasing proportion of westerns towards the end of the run. The 35¢ series published primarily historical novels, with other diverse publications, including non-fiction, mixed in. It would have been interesting to see in what directions Graphic Books might have gone if they had continued publishing but, unfortunately, Graphic Books was a casualty of their distributor's dissolution; the last books appeared in May 1957.

All together Graphic published 127 different books, with 44 re-issues, for a total of 171 volumes. 71 titles were originals and 54 were reprints. There were 6 collections, 2 anthologies and one omnibus. Two books were non-fiction; the rest were novels. Counting the re-issues there were 103 volumes of crime and mysteries, accounting for 60% of the books published. By contrast, there were only 40 westerns, and 16 historical novels. There were 8 books that could be loosely classified as humor and 4 miscellaneous titles. It may be worth noting that Graphic Books may be the longest running and most prolific imprint to have published no science fiction.

All but one of the books have illustrated covers. Almost all of the reissues use the same art as the first printing and I have indicated these repeats. Most of the later books have separate back-cover art; most of the Giants have art that wraps around onto the back cover. I have indicated both of these circumstances by inserting the notations (+bc) and (w/a), respectively, in the Artist Index listings. For convenience I have annotated the back covers as if they were done by the same artists as the front covers, but signatures are rare on either cover and one instance is known where they were done by different artists. Starting at the end of 1955, all the new books in the 25¢ line carried a cover artist credit inside; reissues of earlier books continued to be uncredited. The Giants were hit-or-miss in this regard, with less than half having cover credits.

73 covers are either signed, credited, or have been reliably attributed from secondary sources. Two more have illegible signatures. 51 of the unidentified covers were used on more than one edition. After adding another 16 unidentified books in order to document the presence of back-cover art and wrap-around covers, I had pushed the total coverage to well over the 75% mark, so I bit the bullet and did a full Artist Index of all 171 books. Don't get spoiled; it's unlikely to happen again. The Bookscans database displays all 171 covers.
